Alex Byrne President, IFLA

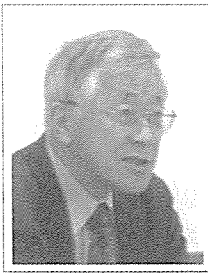

IFLA and its members are delighted to come together in Korea, ancient land of knowledge and culture. We look forward to the opportunities to learn more about Korea and to enjoy the hospitality of our hosts. At the first Congress following the World Summit on the Information Society, participants will consider our role in the information society and the ways in which we can take advantage of the agreements reached during the Summit process. Through this work we will demonstrate that libraries and information services are indeed dynamic engines for the knowledge and information society.

I welcome all to the World Library and Information Congress in Seoul, Republic of Korea, and thank the National Organising Committee, the Korean Library Association and the Government of Korea for your warm welcome. We will enjoy stimulating professional dialogue, intriguing cultural experiences and friendly interaction with colleagues from across the world.
